For the Journal. On Seeing a Sad Face in the Ball Room, BY MISS M. N., OF GOLDSBORO'.

I've tread the vast saloon to-night, Mid gaity and pride, Where all seem happy as they move. Down pleasure's sunny tide. But, as I moved amid the throng,

One pensive eve I met. A heavy sadness dimm'd her brow, And in her smile, regret. And one stood near, who seem'd to speak,

In a soft, persuasive strain, Who saw the shadow on her brow, Which seem'd to give him pain. She coldly turn'd away, and look'd,

I'm weary of the earth. I long for a home in that far land Where the spirit has its birth. I gazed upon that youthful face, Until my heart was sad,

Oh! could I minister a balm, And bid thee now be glad, I'd come, and get me at thy feet, Could I but give relief,

I'd sing unto thy saden'd heart, A song devoid of grief. I'd point thee a land of lovely dreams, Mansions prepared for the blest. Where we feel the depth of a Saviour's love,

And the weary are at rest. I'd point thee a land where time and change; Are broken in their sway, I'd point to thee life's princeless pearl, That fadeth not away.

Look up, dejected one, above, Yes, look from earth away, Look to that world where sorrowing night, is lost in perfect day.

The Rothschilds.

The season was September, 1797. The Langrave of Hesse Cassel saw the French revolutionary army approaching his dominions, and waving at his very frontiers. Hastily he packed up his jewels and valuables, together with between two and three millions of thalers, and took the way to the ancient city of Frankfort, hoping to find means of placing his wealth and the jewels of his house in security.

Arrived at the city which had, for centuries, sent forth the rulers of the "holy Roman Empire," the fugitive Landgrave knocked at the door of an humble Jewish ing. but left one child, a daughter: and to her thus re-

SALTING THE STREETS-A Novelty .- The denizer of Fulton street and vicinity were startled out of their ordinary apathy to street sights yesterday about noon by beholding a team of four white horses, and a large wagon filled with salt, advancing down Fulton street, with two men in the wagon all the time shovelling the salt out into the street as fast as they could. The wagon advanced slowly down to Fulton ferry, the men in it all the way plying their shovels with great activity till the entire street was salted. Much curiosity was manfested to know what all this seasoning was about; some thought the city officials, more or less of them, had devised a new
